Gold may be said to be everlasting, indestructible. The pure acids have no effect upon t. Air and water are alike prohibited from working its destruction; while to baser metals they are decay, to gold they are innoculous. Bury it through long ages, and when the rude tool of the excavator again brings it to light; while everything around it, and originally associated with it has returned to dust from which it sprang; while the delicate form which it adorned has become a powder so impalpable as to be inappreciable; while the strong bone of the mighty warrior crumbles as you gaze upon it; while his trusty sword lies a mass of shale rust, the delicate tracery in gold which adorned it, or the finely wrought tiara which encircled the lofty brow of the fair damsel, is there in its pristine brow of the fair damsel, is there in its pristine beauty, perfect as when it left the workman's hands and became the joy of her fleeting momands and became the joy of her fleeting moments. Yes, days, years, centuries have rolled by; mighty empires have risen and fallen; dynasties that dreamed their power was to be verlasting have passed away, armies have narched, conquered and become nerveless with decrepit old age; cities teeming with population and commerce have become the dwelling blaces of the owl and bat; the very pyramids hemselves, raised in the pride of power, and destined to be forever, have crumbied and are rumbling, and yet that thin filament of gold has stood unchanged through all these mighty hanges. It has withstood triumphantly the estroying hand of time; it is to-day what it was 3,000 years ago. Surely it is a noble metal worthy of all admiration.

LAURA'S FLAG OF TRUCE. BY CHARA BROUGHTON.

"Alfred, I do wish you and Laura could be Miss Southwell's voice was a little tremulous. She was over sixty-five, a slim, fragile-looking John W. Palmoni, of this city, has obtained woman. Her face reminded you of a white rose that has lost its early freshness, but has a delicate loveliness lingering about it still. Alfred gave a good-humored laugh. "Aunty, o you think I take it so much to heart as that? No, no; Laura's little airs and tempers are rather amusing than otherwise. You could scarcely find a more beautiful little face than Laura's, and perhaps it looked all the prettier for the flush of anger that crimsoned it just then. She threw up her head with the air of a spoiled princess as she said, fixing her "As the door happened to be ajar, sir, I had the pleasure of hearing your last sentence. But Laura was in the house by this time. She found her aunt in her room, a front chamber opposite the stairs down which she had fallen. But as she descended the stairs she felt half afraid, half rebellious. "I hate to ask him," she murmured to herself. "How he did treat me last night, and this morning, too! Why, he would scarcely look at me."

Yet in her heart there was a secret longing to be friends with her cousin. She was too proud to apologize, but an idea struck her just then. Her face broke into a smile as, taking out her handkerchief, she tied it to the handle of her parasol.

"My flag of truce," she said, giving it a flourish. "I shall ask for a suspension of hostilities till uncle gets back." Hastening her steps, she tripped off in the di-rection of the arbor where her cousin was wont to smoke his morning eigar. Yes, there he was, enjoying that masculine luxury and the newspaper together. Laura slackened her gait now, as she approached, waving her "white flag" solemnly and slowly.

Alfred looked up, and his tace relaxed into a smile. "Well?" he asked, glancing humorously at the handkerchief. at the bandkerchief.

"It's a flag of truce," said Laura, solemnly.

"I've come to request of my honorable enemy a suspension of hostilities for twenty-four hours."

They started off together, Laura very happy, though a little embarrassed. It seemed strange though a little embarrassed. It seemed strange to be on such pleasant terms with her enemy. But this feeling soon wore away. The ride in the mountain air was delightful, and ere long she found herself talking with Alrred as she had never talked before. He was an uncommonly intelligent young fellow and a good student, but not in the least absent-minded. Nothing seemed to escape his observation, and with it all he was so full of fun and boyish spirits. Laura found him a most agreeable companion, and he on his part saw her in a new light, and began to feel decidedly cousinly and affectionate. Always bright and artless, she was this morning really amiable. Only once did a little sarcastic remark escape her, whereupon Alfred, without a word, pointed smilingly to the handkerchief still waving from the parasol that lay across her A bright color rose in Laura's cheeks, but she looked up sweetly and frankly into his face. "Please forgive me," she said: "I had no business to fire that shot, but I did it from force of

She turned away her head immediately, but Alfred's keen eyes noticed the slight quiver of her lip, and that she had to wink hard to keep the tears back. He changed the conversation at once, and they were soon chatting gayly "Cousin Alfred," broke out Laura, suddenly—
"I beg pardon, Mr. Hillier," correcting herself with a laugh. "Suppose we drop these formalities while we are under the flag of truce," said the young man, pleasantly. "What is it you want of Cou-sin Alfred, Laura?" "Why, there's Sophie Higley and that Mr. Palmer," rejoined Laura. "They'll want to stop and speak to us; but don't do it, if you can help it." A smile of amusement curled Alfred's lip in spite of himself. "How do they come to be driving out together?" "Oh, he's her cousin, and staying there, you know. Dear me! Sophie is waving her hand to you to stop; you'll have to do it, Alfred."

Alfred reined up the pony sharply, and bowed with his usual politeness to the young lady, whose eyes were fixed with envious scrutiny upon him and his companion. Mr. Palmer looked equally discomposed, but Sophie was the first to find her tongue.
"So the two enemies seem to be reconciled," she said, with a laugh. "How are you both this morning?" "We are enjoying our usual health, thank you," said Alfred.
"Miss Laura looks-aw-like a rose, I'm sure," simpered her companion.
"Thank you, Mr. Palmer," said Laura; "I always enjoy your comparisons—they are Mr. Palmer looked immensely flattered. Al-

"Well?" said Laura, coldly, for the expression, "stinging little cockatrice," was still rankling in her soul. "My cousin George is coming in from New Jersey this afternoon. He can only spend one night with us, and if you like I will bring him in this evening."

For two years inclusively—1835 to 1837—he attended lectures at the Gregorian University at Rome, and in 1838, upon returning to America, was assigned the pastorate of St. Joseph's church in New York. On his thirty-fourth birthday anniversary, the 10th of March, 1884, he was consecrated bishop in St. Patrick's cathedral, in the same city. When Archbishop Hughes died, Bishop McCloskey was transfered to Albany as his successor, and for eleven years his labors were characterized with unfailing success. The grand cathedral on eleven years his labors were characterized with unfailing success. The grand cathedral on Fifth avenue, the erection of which was interfered with by the civil war, was his especial care and pride. Since the year 1865 until the completion of this edifice, his great aim was to finish this structure, and he labored hard to push the work along. July 15th, 1875, the cable news was heralded from Rome: "Archbishp McCloskey has been created cardinal priest of the Roman Catholic church." This was the Roman Catholic church." This was hailed with expressions of widespread satishalled with expressions of widespre ad satisfaction and with it unquestionably opened a new epoch of Catholicity in America.

The New York Sun to-day says: "When he entered upon the cardinalate, Cardinal McCloskey was at the zenith of his powers. He was 65 years of age, tall, erect, and dignified.
